

Three H launches an Office System with Another Dimension

Through a functional wall tile program, designers can think of “wall plans” not just “floor plans”.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

(June 15, 2015) Chicago - Three H is officially launching its wall tile office program, today, called Rescape™.

Rescape starts with a wall tile framework that includes panels of various materials: laminates, fabrics, white boards and accessory rails; while also integrating shelving, storage, electrical components and various work surfaces.

Rescape wall tiles are not what are traditionally thought of as a set of components within a frame or features simply attached to walls. Rescape is a proprietary system developed by Three H that starts with a metal frame understructure that is fitted to a complete wall or a portion of a wall. Functional tile components then snap on to the frame structure.

Rescape is about re-thinking and re-shaping workspaces. Designers and clients can now think of the floor plan and the wall plan in their layout of functional office environments.

Various components and style features of all Three H products can be considered when working in a Rescape office. Whether it be storage components from Create™ or desking from The Premiere Series, clients can build a highly productive and beautiful working environments for private offices, open plan and collaborative spaces.

Rescape is a workspace initiative that will continue to evolve at Three H. As designers and clients participate in the creation of new spaces and the way we work - ‘rescaping’ (in Three H terms) - the company will launch new materials, components and style features while seamlessly integrating a variety of office furniture designs.

Design by Jean Bourassa ADIQ and the Three H team led by Brian Conlin, COO.
